

My name is Falynn, and I grew up in Detroit, Michigan. I wanted to be a fashion stylist. I came to LA in 2012. I loved it so much, I booked my first job, and I never went back. Being a freelance wardrobe stylist has its ups and downs. I could be booked for a month, and then I could have no jobs the following month. Around, this time I met Felicita. She's the love of my life. I did need something more stable, because the bills keep rolling in and the projects don't always.

I found this gourmet popcorn company, and I just knew it was a place that I wanted to be. I was copywriting. I was doing marketing. I was leading my team, and I gained a few pounds along the way. I found myself being away from my family a lot. I knew that I wasn't following my passions. I had veered off, and I knew I needed to turn around. I was really scared to leave that job. I didn't know where I was going to go. I didn't know what my next opportunity was. I was making a decent amount of money, but I knew there had to be more.

I needed to go back and fall in love with my skill set. I had no idea what the storage industry was about, but I found that I was able to combine my fashion skills with storage. Shed is a tech-based storage company. We come in. We take a mess, and we make it pretty, just like styling for people's stuff. Attention to detail, love for fashion, a love for organizing, and patience are pretty much the key components to my job.

When you're sitting down to do the interview with a potential candidate, don't just think about what they can do to fill that role, but think about how they can help to build your company beyond that role. I tried to find people that were going to be able to push the envelope and move us forward, and she's clearly the best at doing that.

Indeed helped me find a job that I didn't even know existed. I knew I wasn't the mold, but I knew I could break it.
